Driving Open Innovation in Financial Services

Open collaboration has given rise to many innovations that are transforming financial services technology — from the cloud, to big data, to blockchain. But all of these came from outside of financial services. Our goal is to break down barriers to collaboration — between financial services firms and within individual firms — to enable the cross-pollination of ideas necessary to spark transformative solutions to shared problems in our industry.

What we do

Our Programs

The FINOS community is organized around open collaborative programs to solve common industry problems through open source projects and open standards. In addition to established programs like Plexus Interop (Deutsche Bank's interoperability framework), several new programs will soon join FINOS. As of today, FINOS provides a home for 64 projects, 82 open source repositories and over 300 contributors.

The Open Developer Platform

The ODP offers an independent, secure, and compliant end-to-end hosted developer workflow for open source collaboration standards in highly-regulated industries. ODP provides a fully managed CI/CD pipeline and collaboration tools to ensure the quality, security and IP compliance of FINOS projects, as well as developer access to Symphony and other fintech APIs.

Open Source Readiness

We help our members capture growth opportunities through effective open source engagement. Our community will benefit from common policies, tools, and strategies developed in our Open Source Readiness Program. Members also receive active mentoring, support, and guidance from our member engagement team in using and building open source technology.

Industry Networking

FINOS hosts and sponsors developer and executive focused events for our members and community. If you're interested in co-organizing a developer gathering, meetup, or thought-leadership event, please contact us at info@finos.org.
